From the Publisher:

If you look closely, you will find that the world is bursting, swelling, budding, and ripening with round things awaiting discovery—like eggs about to hatch, sunflowers stretching toward the sun, or planets slowly spinning together for billions of years. Whimsical and imaginative, this poetic ode to all that is round and full of wonder by the Newbery Honor-winning author and poet Joyce Sidman, with illustrations by the two-time New York Best Illustrated Book award recipient Taeun Yoo, inspires curiosity and wonder for this (round) little earth we call home.

What We Say

This gentle ode to all things round begins and ends with the same words: "I love round things." The straightforward, declarative sentences of Joyce Sidman don't invite repeated reading and sound more like an adult than the inquisitive, wonder-full girl depicted. It's the warm and inviting images of Taeun Yoo that save the day. They offer mushrooms that are almost Wonka-like in their bursting glory, eye-catching fields of sunflowers, a gorgeous full moon and enough less-obvious round items to keep kids pointing, without turning the illustrations into a banal guessing game. Not the best, but pleasant enough for nature fans. -- Michael Giltz
