Robots

Fox, $29.98

GOOD looks only get you so far. This computer-animated flick captures the nifty style of children's author William Joyce, but that doesn't make up for a routine tale about misfit robots in the big city.

The Life and Legend of Wyatt Earp

★★★½

Rhino, $34.95

ONE of TV's boldest westerns, it covers the career of lawman Earp with each season leading to a new town — culminating in the five-part series finale "Gunfight at the O.K. Corral." Extras include interviews with the star Hugh O'Brian.

The Man Who Fell to Earth

Criterion, $39.95

CRITERION does it again, giving this oddball David Bowie vehicle about an extra-terrestrial such wonderful packaging, you can't help wanting to own it. Bonus features include commentary from director Nicolas Roeg, Bowie and even a paperback of the Walter Tevis sci-fi novel it's based on.

Born into Brothels

ThinkFilm, $29.99

THIS delightful documentary about the children of prostitutes in Calcutta's red-light district makes one thing clear: Fate can be thwarted with patience and care and opportunity. Usually. Many extras include footage of the kids watching part of the film and an update of where they are now.

ALSO OUT

Intriguing boxing film "Ring of Fire: The Emile Griffith Story" (Anchor Bay; $19.98).

"The Adventures of Sharkboy and Lavagirl in 3-D" (Dimension; $29.99), though flawed, is goofily original.

Keep the kids away from "Family Guy Presents Stewie Griffin: The Untold Story" (Fox; $29.98). A glorified repackaging of three episodes with some new material, it's strictly for adult fans of the show.

The troubled fourth season of "Gilmore Girls" (Warner Bros.; $59.98).
